The Boeing Health Savings Account (HSA): Examining a Commonly Missed Retirement Opportunity

The Health Savings Account (HSA) is one of the best kept secrets when it comes to planning for your retirement. It is often overlooked due to its lower contribution limits compared to the 401k, but don't let that fool you – the HSA packs a serious punch. Let's dive into what makes the Boeing HSA an invaluable tool within your financial playbook and how you can harness its full potential.

Triple Tax Advantage: The HSA's Superpower

The HSA offers a unique triple tax benefit. Just like a traditional 401(k), contributions to an HSA reduce your taxable income. But here's the kicker – like a Roth IRA, the growth and withdrawals (for qualified medical expenses) are completely tax-free. This covers a wide range of expenses, from health insurance deductibles to prescription glasses to your kids' braces. As you plan for retirement, remember, the HSA can even cover your Medicare premiums. With a recent study predicting that the average couple can expect to spend over $300,000 on health care in retirement¹, the HSA is a terrific way to set aside tax advantaged funds for this future expense.

Think Long Term to Maximize Your HSA

We often see Boeing professionals regularly contributing to their HSA, only to dip into it right away for current medical bills. Additionally, we commonly see these HSA contributions left in cash rather than invested. This is a major missed opportunity. The secret sauce for maximizing your HSA is to treat it like a growth investment. By letting it sit and grow you can enjoy the benefit of tax-free growth.

Contributing to Your Boeing HSA Account

Choosing the Boeing Advantage+ (high deductible) plan opens the door to HSA contributions. This is the only plan that is eligible for contributions to a Health Savings Account. For 2023, the total contribution limits are $3,850 for individual plans and $7,750 for family plans. Fast forward to 2024, and you're looking at a limit of $4,150 for individuals and $8,300 for families. For those 55 or older you can contribute an additional $1,000. These limits include both your contributions and Boeing's.

If your spouse is working and has their own health insurance benefits, coordinating is key to maintaining HSA eligibility. For example, they need to be on your plan to contribute the family maximum directly. And watch out for their Flexible Spending Account – it can affect your HSA eligibility.

If you're on the Advantage+ plan Boeing chips into your HSA, depositing contributions in January at which time they vest immediately. Boeing contributes $800 for an individual and $1,600 for a family in 2024. Fully vested, this money is yours to keep, even if you separate from Boeing.

Deciding Between the HSA and the FSA

The FSA (Flexible Spending Account) is another tool to save for medical expenses in a tax advantaged way. The FSA has lower contribution limits ($3k) than the HSA and is a use it or lose it account where you can only roll $550 to the following year. Any amount you don't use beyond this is forfeited. Furthermore, if you separate from Boeing if the account isn't used it could be lost as well. The HSA typically offers more bang for your buck. But if you're not on the HSA-eligible plan, the FSA can be a decent alternative – just contrary to the HSA with the FSA make sure to use it each year.

There are some instances where after maximizing the HSA you can then contribute to an FSA as well. Be mindful of the limited purpose rules in which you can only use the FSA account after you satisfy your deductible.

An Example of the HSA in Action

Picture this, you max out your HSA family contribution for 10 years – that's $8,300 in 2024 including what Microsoft contributes, increasing annually with inflation. Invest this in growth-oriented funds, and let's say you average a 9% return². In 10 years, you're looking at around $154,000 in your HSA, ballooning to $237,000 if you let it grow another 5 years! Starting at age 50, that's a sizeable nest egg at 65 for Medicare premiums and other retirement medical expenses.

Getting Started with Your HSA

When evaluating the different options at Boeing it is important to prioritize wisely. Typically, you will first want to contribute to the 401k to receive Boeing's match. From there we can look at the HSA account.

Remember, to be eligible for the HSA at Boeing you must be on the Advantage+ health plan. With a critical topic such as health insurance, the most important thing is to first get the plan for your needs. Then we can strategize around maximizing your HSA and other tools.
